Brenda Feigen is an experienced intellectual property, entertainment and anti-discrimination attorney who fights hard for her clients. She represents individuals who need general business contracts negotiated, often since we are in Los Angeles for film, TV, music, art, new media or book deals. Feigen also represents companies that need her firm's services with respect to mergers and acquisitions with and of other entertainment companies or for various types of transactional work. She has other clients who are seeking funding for films. A different cluster of clients, who have experienced discrimination, harassment or wrongful termination seek her counsel because of her long-standing expertise in civil and women's rights and GLBT cases. Feigen now selectively represents businesses of all kinds and includes companies that are being sued for wrongful termination and discrimination by employees, some of whom she has come to believe are "professional plaintiffs". Whatever a particular client's situation is, Feigen listens carefully and tailors her advice to match each issue, as well as the client's needs.
